Il libro delle cose perdute

C'era una volta - perché è così che tutte le storie dovrebbero iniziare - un bambino che perse sua madre. In verità, la stava perdendo da molto tempo. Il male che la stava uccidendo era una cosa strisciante e vigliacca, una malattia che la divorava da dentro, consumandone lentamente la luce interiore cosicché i suoi occhi diventavano ogni giorno meno luminosi e la sua pelle più pallida. E a mano a mano che lei gli veniva sottratta, un poco per volta, nel bambino cresceva la paura di perderla del tutto. Lui desiderava più di ogni altra cosa che lei restasse. Non aveva fratelli né sorelle, e malgrado volesse bene a suo padre era pur vero che ne voleva di più a sua madre. Non sopportava l'idea di una vita senza di lei.
